The term 'AASTHA' coined by former SEBS President Bharat Rai 358A in the mid-eighties to increase fraternity and respect for each other amongst the Budhanilkantha students has seen the practical statement been followed since then.

AASTHA has been able to tap SEBS members creativity with articles, collages and its activities coverage from the beginning. This issue, following the earlier trend has tried to make its best possible to cover it, with addition of members directory.

Attempts have been made to make the datas, articles and SEBS activities more presentable. And I owe all the blames for this issues errors.

All members who have painstaking helped this publication deserve credit and I would like to thank Chitra, Pramod, Prabhat and Bharat for their cordial support extended during the event. I can not end my note without thanking the sebsobline webmaster, Rajan Nepal for providing the directory in this edition. All advertisers too deserve thanks for the support and trust that they have endowed to SEBS.

Looking for your feedbacks to push the SEBS annual publication in the days to come.

Message from FOBS Chairman

I am very happy to know that SEBS is bringing out its annual magazine "AASHTA", and I feel proud that I am also a SEBSers and the Chairman of Friends of Budhanilkantha School. My role is, therefore, important as I have to bring Budhanilkantha School, Parents and the SEBS more closely and collectively to undertake the Herculean task of nation building. I thank the SEBS, BNKS and all parents of the school their support and co-operation in fulfilling our mission.

I think SEBS now has a firm foundation and it has pool of efficient and highly talented and skilled workforce required in any front of the nation-building process. The organisation is now truly a global organisation and is one of the largest non-governmental organisation in the country. I am, therefore, confident that BNKS parents will have closer tie with SEBS and work together for the promotion and development of BNKS and for providing selfless service to the nation.

Finally, I hope that this publication will go a long way in representing and spreading SEBS credo nationally and internationally and in highlight further the prestige and reputation of Budhanilkantha School in the days to come.

NSP & DOKO Update

Nationwide Scholarship Program (NSP) and Sustainable Doko Dai Mobile Library Project (SDDMLP)

Nationwide Scholarship Program (NSP)

NSP was established in 1991 by Budhanilkantha students (Social Service Club members) with broad and pragmatic educational objectives to help underprivileged Nepalese children and their associated communities. The SEBS Annual General Meeting then incorporated NSP as one of the programs of SEBS in 1993.

NSP – North America (NSP-NA) is an autonomous part of NSP formed in 2002 and one of its central objectives is to come up with new funding and publicity initiatives, specifically by tapping into North America resources (SEBS NA and others).

Prior to receiving the grant for the implementation of SDDMLP, 193 children from 43 districts had been sponsored through NSP. This year, NSP is supporting the education of about 300 bright and needy students for the secondary education (classes 8 – 10).

SDDMLP (Doko Project)

The Sustainable Doko Dai Mobile Library Project (SDDMLP), implemented by NSP in partnership with Development Project Service Centre (DEPROSC Nepal) with financial grant worth US$ 166,771.00 from the Development Marketplace 2003 of the World Bank. NSP-NA initiated the proposal idea in March 2003 as an opportunity to further NSP's cause. The team hopes to implement the project successfully so that it becomes a model that can be picked up and replicated in other geographical areas by developmental organizations.

Project Overview

The project primarily aims to provide scholarships to needy children, impart capacity-building training programs, and run mobile libraries in Dokos from state-of-the-art Regional Community Centres located in Barabise and Mahendranagar. Local Dais and Didis will transport educational resources in 10 different routes in each region. Each route has several stops where books will be kept for about a week.

Other components of the project are:

- Regional Community Centre (RCC): RCC building construction in both the regions is underway and will be complete by September at the latest. The RCC will have a library that will act as a base for the implementation of the mobile libraries. RCC will also be equipped with a photocopier, computers, fax, and internet services. The community hall will be rented out for social functions. People using these services will be charged nominal fees in order to sustain the project.
- Scholarship: The project has already awarded scholarships to more than 300 bright and needy students to complete their secondary level of education. More than 140 scholarships have been awarded in the project areas (Barabise and Mahendranagar) and remaining 160+ scholarships have been awarded through NSP in about 30 other districts. The district coordinator, who is either a student from Budhanilkantha School or a member of SEBS, facilitates the process of scholarship distribution without any administrative cost. We cover school tuition, books, and stationery according to NSP scholarship distribution guidelines.
- Training: Training is a key component of the program and has been integrated in the project to empower the local community. The training courses provided are agricultural income generation, bee keeping, first aid, para-vet, reproductive health, computer literacy training, non-formal education training. Computer Literacy Training has commenced since mid July. More than 200 individuals are expected to benefit from it.

Organizational Structure

Project Facilitation Committee (PFC) consisting seven members from SEBS, SEBS NA, NSP, NSP NA, DEPROSC Nepal (partner organization) and member from the project as the member secretary, is the apex body of the project. It formulates policies of the project and SEBS NSP assesses the progress as well as approves and verifies financial statement of the project. Regional Management Committee, which consists of local community members, will be responsible for the management of facilities and programs at regional centres.

A team of professionals is hired at the head office in Kathmandu (Team Leader, Program Coordinator, Information and Communication Officer) and regional offices (Regional Manager, Regional Assistants, Community Liaisons, Readership Promoters, Doko dai/didis) in Barabise and Mahendranagar to implement the project.

Project Beneficiaries

1. In two project areas – Barabise and Mahendranagar
 - Easy access to reading materials and RCC programs to more than 150,000 individuals, more than 300 scholarship recipients, training imparted to more than 300 individuals
 - Direct and indirect employment to more than 200 individuals in the project areas: 70 local staff already hired (Regional Managers, Regional Assistants, Community Liaison Officers and Readership Promoters, Doko Dai/Didis)
 - Money that goes directly to project areas: $ 118,181 (71% of project grant)
2. Other scholarship recipients throughout Nepal: $20,589 (12% of project grant)

Project Updates by category:

Buildings:

- The Mahendranagar Regional Community Centre is nearing completion and is expected to be complete by the end of August.
- The construction of Regional Community Centre in Barabise has started and is expected to be complete by September.

- Book Processing – Till date, volunteers have been processing the books for pilot routes in Barabise and Mahendranagar. In the near future, we will be hiring library professionals for this purpose.

- The RCC Construction Committee members of Barabise are local residents and they oversee the construction process.
- The community members at both project areas have been enthusiastically involved in the decision-making process till date.
- Land has been acquired at both locations free of cost (contributed by the community)

Education: What has gone wrong?

Kamraj Bhandari

With the 1951 people's agitation, democracy was installed. The arrival of democracy had a diverse effect on society- the start of education, building of physical infrastructure (bridges, roads, houses, and electricity), and industrial/institutional administrative set up, political linkage with the rest of the world to name a few. But in the process of transformation the state has been facing many bitter and unsuccessful experiences.

However, I am focusing on education at the school level only. Before 1951 apart from the Rana royals and their courtiers, the general public either went to Benaras (India) or hired a tutor to teach their children at home. But after the advent of democracy, a move was taken to open education for all and the subjects included not only Sanskrit but Nepali and English, Social Sciences, Mathematics and Natural Sciences as well. Since then many educational institutions have open. While some have been able to maintain their position, others have failed to do so.

Everyone, including academics have pointed at the failure but have never tried to address the underlying factors. Causes for the failure of the educational institutions can be as follows:

State limitations: The state's move was definitely an appraising one. The state was concerned to educate the general mass, though some knew Sanskrit in general. The state had to look in every field of the state mechanism- education, health, infrastructure, administration and governance. And as such the state could not manage its service sector, as there were few bureaucrats & technocrats with management experience.

Funding mechanism: The state was at that time addressing feudal reforms. It had to generate revenue from its existing poor financial institutions, allocate the meagre resources it had to this sector at a time when the state was simply transforming from the feudalistic oligarchy and conservative masses. The amount of capital invested in this sector was not enough to meet the need and external help was much needed, leading to upper external hand.

Foreign involvement and handover mechanism: Like other programmes, education was new to Nepal and foreign assistance was the need of the hour. Foreign assistance arrived, built the infra-structure, taught well and left after the agreed withdrawal time-frame. But what they failed to understand was whether the people they were assigning the responsibility to were mentally prepared or not. Also, the weakest point in the "handover" was that the predecessor handed over the administration without proper training to the successors.

School's approach: Despite the fact that schools were facing such problem gravely, we hardly see any schools trying to take initiatives to revive their once prominent legacy. The "keep going as long as it is functional" tendency is seen to have been the operational mechanism of the successors and the school's legacy faded away.

New education policy: In order to revive Nepalese sovereignty, culture, history and dignity a New Educational Policy was introduced in 1970 (with vocational subjects included) and implemented two years later. Accordingly all the schools, whether community or private ones were nationalised. The course structure was definitely made to suit the nation, but it failed to understand the people's wish and the poor industrial infra-structure it possessed. So it aroused anger, hate and mistrust among the parents and general public, leading to poor performance.

Parent's role: Parents were proud that they had their children in such a school as long as the school was functioning well and participated effectively in the school affairs. But when the foreign teachers withdrew and their input was needed more, they started to send their children to neighbouring India rather than continue their schooling at the same school (which soared after the introduction of the 1970s new education policy). The act of "look after the body as long as it is well and discard it when it starts showing signs of sickness" operated in depth among the parents and the school lost its well-wisher mass, who not only helped it run financially but also advocated for its well functioning.

Student's role: After spending nearly decades of schooling, students knowingly/unknowingly definitely have the feeling of taking care of schools. Though the return/assistance from the sixteen year old student cannot be immediate, some bright/high calibre students can be included in the academic staff. The school could have been able to instil maturity, love and respect not only for the school but also could have helped in the overall development of the student and contact with its alumnus could have increased. Sadly, this did not happen. In addition when the alumnus settled and their children grew up, better schools had opened up and they had their children enrolled in them. As a result, the frequency of alumnus participation in their former school affairs declined considerably, leaving behind the school stranded without its most important care taker and spokesperson whose presence, however small, could have made much difference.

Political upheavals: Nearly a decade later after the introduction of the new educational policy by the state, political activities in the nation soared in 1980. Denouncement of the then Panchayat regime took its final turn and the students started to participate in political activities frequently rather than attending school. As a result, the little trust that the general people, rich/poor had, declined rapidly, and the move to open more private schools or send students to neighbouring nations took pace, leaving behind only a few students accelerating the decline.

The government had sole responsibility over the country's development. But other problems apart from education like key issues of defence, security, foreign relations etc. exerted more resources and care. Thus the closed door policy of the state prevented participation of the general public at large, until the reinstatement of democracy in 1990. But despite all odds, some schools opened in the early fifties have been doing well simply because they are either missionary schools or the existing problem was understood by their management committees. Some schools, like Budhanilkantha opened as a role model school under the 1970s new education policy, has been doing very well, as it has the state, parents, students and the school acting cohesively for the maintenance, upgrading and overall development of the institution. Private schools opened before/after the seventies or later have been doing well because of the investment made in management, services provided to staff and the necessary action plans they make.

The public schools have been the worst performers in the education sector. However, if we try to remedy the above problem, definitely Nepal can be made into a solid education centre, accelerating not only the production of cream manpower for the nation's needs, but also helping the state generate large sums of cash which is not only vital for development activities but for administrative and other purposes.

The National Interest of Nepal: A Case of Small State

- Rajeev Kumar

Definition:

The definition of national interest is vague and it is often defined to suit rulers, decision-makers or countries in their own way. The dispute of defining national interest either as an art or science remains at the center stage of International Relations discipline. The former believes as a struggle among various subjective views and preferences, a struggle in which the national interest is the political outcome. For the latter, it can be arrived at objectively and scientifically.

Hans J. Morgenthau equates national interest with the pursuit of state power, where power stands for anything that establishes and maintains control by one state over another. This power-control relationship can be achieved by coercive means as well as cooperative techniques. Power is the ends, and interest, the means of international political action.

The residual meaning inherent in the concept of national interest is survival. In Morgenthau's view, the minimum requirement of nation-states is to protect their physical, political and cultural entity against encroachments by other nation-states. The ingredients of foreign policy constitute national goal or objectives to be achieved and means or capabilities for achieving them. Therefore "interest" implies a need and to claim that particular foreign policy is in the national interest imparts a degree of authority and legitimacy to that policy.

Whether Mulchtyar Bhitens Thapa's expansionist policy of Imperial Gorkha or Janga Bahadur Rana's testing the mettle of his leadership by waging a war with Tibet was in Nepal's national interest. Such justification of foreign policies in the name of national interest is committed. According to Lord Palmerston, National Interest "hold the real policy of state... involving her own particular interests, political or commercial- is to be champion of justice and right; pursuing that course with moderation and prudence, not becoming the Quixote of the world, but giving the weight of her moral sanction and support wherever she thinks that justice is, and wherever she thinks that wrong has been done."

National interest, in its simplest term, is the interest of a nation which is eternal and perpetual. It is the duty of a country to follow these interests.

Approaches:

National interest is defined in three ways:

- 1.The elitist approach sees national interest is what decision-makers at the highest echelon of government and particularly Ministry of Foreign Affairs say it is and deems it to be general societal objectives and does so perpetually.
- 2.The realist approach to the national interest gives primacy to security in foreign policy. Security requires the "acquisition and rational management of power."
- 3.Third approach undermines above both approaches as it identifies national interest which are "given by tenets of the political process that have an independent value - those of democratic procedure."

National interest is, therefore, a key concept in foreign policy as it provides a material basis of which foreign policy is made which is intertwined again with national security. National Interest of the US has global reach and any threat to its national security is justified by embarking on aggression and offensive attack in any theatre of countries or regions of the world for the sake of its national interest. So what could be the national interest of a small country like Nepal which possesses neither power nor capability to wield regional or global influence.

Nepal's National Interest:

Sandwiched between two colossal powerful neighbours -India and China, it would be in the interest of Nepal to maintain good neighbourliness and balanced relations. As a small landlocked country, Nepal's national interest was moulded by the founding father of modern Nepal, King Pirthvi Narayan Shah the Great. In his corpus Divyaupadesh (Divine Counsels) it is lucidly mentioned Nepal's geo-political-reality in the form of yam theory. Nepal, he considered, as a "yam between two big stones" (metaphorically then the British India and Imperial China) and forewarned not to pursue offensive strategy but maintain good relationship with both and apply defensive strategy as the last resort. On the contrary staunch neutrals like Sweden and Switzerland base their neutrality on strong military establishments to deter any would-be aggressor. Not high-tech weapons but valiant and sturdy Gurkhas blessed Nepal.

A senior diplomat in his slender book, Nepal and the World, noted that "nature and history have designed Nepal as a well-marked and distinct national and cultural unity" further citing French scholar, Sylvan Levi that we (Nepalese) "pursue our destinies by ourselves, cut off from our surrounding." To some extent anarchy followed isolationist policy and confine the country to a reclusive state. The policy became futile with no progress in the country, and domestic discontent in Nepal and anti-colonialism gathering momentum in India, international political milieu was changing thick and fast, Nepal had to shed isolationism in 1950 but could not shy away from secrecy in foreign affairs. With the advent of revolution of 1950, non-aligned foreign policy was the only strategy of survival in the vagaries of world affairs.

The basic goals of foreign policy or national interest of a country- big or small- are outlined as follows:

1. maintaining the integrity of the state and primary preservation of national identity from the outside powers.
2. promoting economic interests or the welfare of the state. It depends on the assets of state including geographical location, natural resources, climatic and size of population.
the manner in which these assets are exploited.
3. providing national security.
4. protecting national prestige and interests of the citizens overseas.

As a founding member of non-alignment movement (NAM), Nepal always adheres to the principles enshrined in the Panchasheel Doctrine which are as follows:

- mutual respect for each other's independence, sovereignty and integrity.
- mutual understanding and no act of hostility.
- mutual non-interference in internal affairs.
- equality, mutual benefit and economic and cultural assistance
- peaceful co-existence.

It is the cornerstone of defining relations with our immediate neighbours. Though Nepalese people have not achieved diplomatic finesse and adroitness, they are able to maintain bon homie with two powerful and populous neighbours.

Article 25(5) of the Constitution of Kingdom of Nepal of 1990 underlines that in international relations country "shall be guided by the objective of enhancing the dignity of nation in the international arena by maintaining the sovereignty, integrity and independence of the country." Article 26(15) further states that the foreign policy of Nepal "shall be guided by the principles of the UN charter, non-alignment, the Panchasheel, international law and the value of world peace." Clause 16 of the same article states that the country "shall pursue a policy making of continuous efforts to institutionalize peace for Nepal through international recognition, by promoting co-operative and good relations in the economic, social, and other spheres on the basis of equality with the neighbouring and all other countries of the world."

Some trenchant critics say that our foreign policy which is seen as directive principles of state policy has blurred the boundary of national policy and international policy. And for immediate political gains, goals of foreign policy are oriented in a way which helps bolster government against domestic opponents. Secondly, there was an effort to institutionalize peace for Nepal through Zone of Peace Proposal of 1975 recognized by 116 countries but thwarted by immediate regional power, India. So how far a small state can achieve goals through independent national interest without taking into consideration of its compatibility with the interests of the big power. Thirdly, threat to national security of Nepal or small states in general emanate from internal (low intensity political conflict) than from the external one. If country cannot keep its internal security threat at bay, soon external security apparatus encroach into the territory. Already it is manifested in terms of logistical military assistance in form of hardware has been provided to the government to pulverize the internal low intensity political conflict in Nepal. It has negative connotation as with the case of agreement, American Point Four Programme in 1951, that the enhancement of national security requires foreign economic and military aid.

Despite these drawbacks Nepal has at least called for regional cooperation to harness its untapped hydel resources staggering at 40,000 MW. It is the single strategic natural resource a small country like Nepal possesses which could play a catalytic role in ameliorating the living standards of people. There may be other options like fostering relationships with the developed or donor countries that can provide material and economic assistance in donee's developmental efforts but exploiting rationally the available natural resource would be better option among lesser options for small country.

Though small states display low levels of over all participation in international affairs circumscribed by a rather narrow geographical and issue range of foreign policy concerns, Nepal and other small states actively participate the discussions in the international fora. They enjoy the principle and right of equality among nations in the cosmopolitan gatherings of the UN General Assembly. Since this concept is fast eroding in institutions like World Trade Organisation where sometime unfair deal may take place, small states like Nepal should champion and strive for against discrimination on the basis of geographically disadvantaged situations of landlocked and least developed countries in particular.

Nepal has continuously worked at different international fora for the recognition of free and unrestricted rights of transit for land-locked countries. It would be also in Nepal's interest to judge every international issue on its merit without consideration of anybody's fear or favour. Nepal's role as peacekeeper is evinced through the contribution of more than 35,000 Nepalese soldiers under the aegis of UN Peacekeeping Operations so far.

Constructive engagement with the outside world has become indispensable and how far small state like Nepal can linger on national interest in the globalisation era remains troublesome for students of international relation.

Parenting a Child and Reprogenetics: An Ethical Dilemma

Parvinder Arora

The desire to have and raise a child is such a powerful instinctive force that many people who experience it have a hard time explaining where it comes from. Michael Specter of Washington Post writes the following words in response to a mother giving birth to a child to match bone marrow transplant donee and this is equally relevant to the instinct of bearing a child. In his words: "Can anybody there provide a universal definition of a good reason to have a child? Is it better to have a baby because your friends are having a baby, or your marriage seems like it's missing something, than to have a baby to save a life? What about all the parents who have a second child solely because they don't want 'only child'? Is it better to have a baby to give your first kid a playmate than to have one to save your first kid's life?"

One of the universal rights of a married adult couple is to have and raise a family, no matter how good they are in it. But, for an avoidable reason, if a couple or a member of the couple is not capable of having the potential of parenting a child in conservative way, i.e. with the natural intercourse with the different sex counter-part, then should s/he be allowed to parent a child with the application of modern day science?

Though I am not much versed with religious interpretation of parenting a child, which may be interpreted in different ways in different religions, but my conscience allows me to advocate for the couple or a member of the couple to apply any available option(s) for overcoming the limitation of parenting child, because if an individual is permitted (socially, and probably religiously) to practice medical option for clinical malfunctioning, for say, it be the lack of secretion of insulin to balance the blood sugar content in blood, then why should an individual should be refrained from practicing clinical option for parenting a child?

INFERTILITY CAUSES AND CURES

There are many causes of infertility affecting both male and female. A woman may not be able to ovulate, or may have defective fallopian tube blocking the passage of ova, or may produce ova resistant to fertilization, or zona coats around the fertilized ova and embryo may be resistant to the hatching, or her reproductive tract may be hostile to sperm that enter or her immune system may destroy the sperm. Similarly, a man may not be able to produce sperm, or may produce very few, or the sperm may not be able to inseminating.

The achievements in reprogenetics have facilitated to overcome these biological barriers of parenting a child. First reported case of allowing a couple to parent a child with fertility defect was succeeded by collective effort of Patrick Steptoe and Robert Edwards, who gave Brown family the first test tube baby on July 25, 1978, a girl child later named Louise Joy, in Oldham and General District Hospital in the town of Oldham, England. This historic event, in vitro fertilization (IVF) was milestone in reprogenetics and it has come up to the stage of cloning of adult cell to develop embryo and subsequent fetus to be born. The work of Steptoe and Edwards was a historic scientific achievement in reprogenetics, but present day this method only covers a small fraction of couples suffering from blocked or defective fallopian tube.

But still today, nearly every form of infertility treatment employs IVF for cases not responsive to less invasive treatment. The reproductive problems faced by women could be overcome by different protocols. The lack of natural ovulation could be overcome by hormones induced ovulation. Where as hostile reproductive tract or immune system could be overcome by fertilization outside reproductive tract. One of the major obstacles in fertilization, the invasion of sperm into zona coats to inseminate ova could be overcome by injecting sperm directly inside the space between zona coat and ova. Additionally, if zona around embryo is resistant to hatching then it can be disrupted manually in the laboratory before the embryo is placed into uterus for implantation. The next major obstacle in fertilization, if sperm and egg refuse to fuse, no matter how well they are coaxed together, a single live sperm could be picked in a glass needle and directly injected into the egg cytoplasm avoiding fusion together by the protocol called Intra-Cytoplasmic Sperm Injection (ICSI; developed in 1992).

Like wise the problems faced by men also could be overcome these days. With the development of ICSI, the sperm concentration and quality is no impediment in reprogenetics. But the question may arise how to overcome the limitation if a man does not produce any sperm cell. But this is also not a problem in present day reprogenetics technology because of development of Round Spermatid Nucleus Injection (ROSI). The protocol is based on incorporating the nucleus of round tailless cells called spermatid cells that are the precursors of matured sperm cells and are formed just after meiosis division hence having haploid number of chromosomes.

Present day reprogenetics protocols highly depend on cryopreservation of gametes (both ova and sperm) because it allow preserving the gametes for necessary manipulation. This hence avoids recurrent induction of ova by injecting hormone or to synchronize the ovulatory cycle of two women of whom one is the donor and the other is recipient who is generally unable to produce ova.

Finally, the other alternative to overcome infertility is cloning of an adult cell nucleus into ova devoid of nucleus and implanting for fertilization. This technology has been reported for some mammals but has not been yet reported for human. Reporting of successful birth of Dolly from cloning of adult cell of ewe on February 23, 1997 has raised ethical, psychological and religious outrage. The usefulness and scientific consequences of this has to be yet verified and acceptance by the majority of the community is yet to be achieved, but some of the countries have already put mandatory ban on research on human embryo cloning.

USE OF IVF AND SOCIAL CONSEQUENCES

Although the protocols described above was solely developed initially in view of harnessing a family life of married adult (conservative ones) who are unable to reproduce in conventional manner, it has been employed for different categories of prospective parents because the right of bearing and rearing child has been defined in different ways in different societies. The extent of the use of IVF might not be acceptable to some communities, but it has been successfully performed to different prospective parents that we may not be able to interpret in our conventional interpretation of parenting child. For the brief glimpse of the extent of the use of IVF to some prospective parents, I would like to recall the reports from different newspapers.

1) The Washington Post reported on Dec. 7, 1987:

Episcopalian became a single mother through artificial insemination. She has argued that the technique avoids the church's ban on sex outside of marriage, and her bishop has supported the position. "I have done nothing illegal or immoral in having this child," the mother said (name of the mother is not indicated to keep her privacy). "I can not think what the offense might be. Adultery? None of the parties were married. Extramarital sex? No sexual act occurred."

2) London Telegraph announced on July 19, 1994:

"In Buckinghamshire a woman who says that she never 'fancied' a man enough to go to bed with him has a son by a 'gay' best."

3) Daily Mail reported on January 19, 1995:

Two childless lesbians have become the parents of a baby girl following a successful DIY (donor aided artificial insemination) pregnancy. Both claim they are virgins and the child's mother says she conceived after inseminating herself with a sperm donated by a gay friend. The space for the father's name in the birth certificate will remain blank. The mother said that (name has been excluded to keep the privacy) they had longed and thought for a baby but it would be impossible since neither was prepared to have sex with a man to become pregnant. "Now against all the odds, the dream has become true," she said.

The above three cases were indicated to signify biological mothers from three different environments, i.e. one from the religious group, one from a single mother, and the third from the lesbian mother. All of these biological mothers would have otherwise practically never had a child in conventional manner. All these news reports are of those individuals whose instinct to have a child was so strong that they resorted to available tools to bear a child as per their choice and right.

The writer believes such news would be gradually accepted even in Nepalese society as the society moves ahead with time. As a typical example, the news published on The Kathmandu Post on March 30, 2000 may be referred. It reported that two teen age high school girls got married and were arrested by the police later on. Since I am not much versed with the Nepalese legal system, I can't comment legality of this, but according to Sub-Inspector Bhatta there is no legal provision in the law for a homosexual marriage. Though the act of police may or may not be in accordance to the legal system, but it had ground interpreting that such cases would create social disorder.

The major question here is whether same sex marriage is universal right of a person to choose a partner. I would like to ask the readers whether these couples have right to choose their partner or not? Now lets consider that they have their prerogative right to choose their partner and to bear a child, should they be allowed to bear a child in IVF? And if they desire to have a child but both of them don't want to have intercourse with the man, but both of them would like to have some sort of biological relation with the child one of them is going to bear, should they be allowed to apply cloning technology where one of the partners would provide genetic material and the other member will bear the child and give birth?

The mentioned cases, all of which may appear as cosmetic use of technology, may initiate debate or opposition. May it be a married couple with birth defect or single mother or lesbian mother, it is all their prerogative right to have a child. At the present stage, Nepalese society still can not accept same sex marriage, but, I think, sooner the society will come to point of embracing the reality even though majority of the members don't support the idea. Because a civilization or a society has generally developed and matured despite the fact that any changes in custom or practice in the emotionally charged area (that includes the feelings and religious interpretation) has always elicited a response from established custom with vigor negation at first; then negation without vigor; then slow and gradual curiosity, study, evaluation and finally a very slow but steady acceptance.
